“The goodness of God is that which disposes Him to be _____, cordial, _____, and _____ of good toward men.”

What happens if God is not good?

Why does God hear our prayers?

“... when we return to God, even if our _____ were as great in number as all mankind's put together, still God would not _____ them against us, but would have as much _____ in us as if we had _____ sinned.”

How will the person who honestly wants reconciliation with God be found?

How do we determine our reception by God?

What does God's goodness arouse in us, and what is the paradox of that?

How does this chapter challenge what you think about God?
